By Matt Rocheleau, Town Correspondent

The draft plans to redesign a two-mile corridor in the neighborhood's commercial center will be unveiled at a public meeting Tuesday evening, more than two and a half years since the project was announced.

"The [design] work is pretty much complete at this point," on the Centre and South Transportation and Streetscape Action Plan, said Vineet Gupta, director of planning at the city's transportation department.

He said the design plan that will be presented next week is a summary of all of the design work done to this point.

The city's redevelopment authority, the mayor's neighborhood services office, a community advisory group, and a project consultant, McMahon and Associates, are working together to improve the area from the Jackson Square T station on Centre Street to the Forest Hills T station on South Street.

The redesign focuses on transportation, business, and streetscape issues.

The community advisory group, project consultants and city transportation and redevelopment officials will be at Tuesday's meeting in the Agassiz School cafeteria at 20 Child St. from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. to present the plan. It will be available for review and comment for one month.
