By Matt Rocheleau, Town Correspondent

CBS News reporter Katie Couric will be in Boston today to interview area college students for her ongoing "American Voices" series.

Couric, who co-hosted NBC's Today Show for 15 years, announced her visit to at least three schools - Boston College, Boston University and Emerson College - Monday morning on Twitter: "On my way to Boston to interview students from @bostoncollege @emersoncollege

@BU_Tweets for American voices series!"

She posted a photo Monday afternoon, with the message: "With young voters at boston college. All really smart and impressive! Thanks to them for talking to me!"

Voters from across the country are interviewed for the the evening news series, which began airing segments earlier this month as part of the network's coverage leading up to the Nov. 2 election. The series features, "real people giving their views on the real issues that matter most," according to Couric's blog.

Elizabeth Wasden, communications director for the CBS Evening News with Katie Couric, confirmed Couric's visit.

Check back with Boston.com in the coming days for more details on the veteran journalist's visit and to find out when the Boston-filmed "American Voices" segment will air.
