HYDE PARK

Though still rare, Hyde Park resident parking permits tripled since 2006

Compared to the rest of Boston's neighborhoods, Hyde Park continues to the have by far the fewest number of city-issued resident parking permits. However, that small figure has nearly tripled from four years ago, the city says.

Under the resident parking program, residents apply for a permit that allows them to park in designated areas on their neighborhood's streets without getting ticketed. The program is free, but requires annual renewal and in some areas a few circles around the block to nab an empty spot.

Increases in permit figures reflect the city's effort to expand the permit parking program in several communities, said city transportation spokeswoman Tracey Ganiatsos. The South End, North End, South Boston, Dorchester, East Boston, Roxbury, West Roxbury, Chinatown, Hyde Park, Jamaica Plain and Charlestown all have more active resident permits now than four years ago.

"In the past few years, at the request of neighborhood residents, [the city] expanded the program in several neighborhoods," Ganiatsos said last month. "When the program is expanded to additional streets in a neighborhood, more residents will apply for permits to be able to park in close proximity to their homes."

In April 2006, there were a measly 22 active permits in Hyde Park, which rose to 35 by January 2008 before jumping to 61 as of late September.

Resident parking spaces are most common in the downtown neighborhoods as well as near transit stations in all neighborhoods "to act as a deterrent to all day parking by commuters," Ganiatsos said.

The program expanded to include residential streets near local business districts "to encourage turnover at on-street spaces and discourage all day employee parking," she said.

"BTD does not have one RPP model, rather, we attempt to meet the individual needs of each neighborhood and balance the competing demands for curb-space in all city neighborhoods," Ganiatsos said.
