A neighborhood career and job-finding resource center will be closed for about two weeks for major pipe repair and related construction.

The Allston-Brighton Resource Center on Western Avenue will close Monday, Dec. 20 when the repair work begins and is slated to re-open on Jan. 5, according to a statement from the center.

The center provides an array of free services for adults, including computer and Internet access, job-search related copying and faxing, a reference library, one-on-one staff assistance, referrals to one-stop career centers for expanded services, workshops, and upcoming job fair information.

The state's unemployment rate rose – from 8.1 percent in October to 8.2 percent in November – last month for the first time in 10 months as employers cut 8,600 jobs, state officials reported earlier today. However, Massachusetts unemployment rate remains below the national average of 9.8 percent.

Those in need of its services during the closure are advised to visit to www.detma.org or www.mass.gov/dwd to find a nearby career center, or to visit other neighborhood resource centers in the city, including one on East Broadway in South Boston (617-635-0771) or on Washington Street in Roxbury (617-989-9100).
