Area leaders will hold a roundtable discussion Saturday morning in Jamaica Plain about the potential that Boston could lose more than $3 million in cuts in federal grant funding.

Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino and Newton Mayor Setti Warren will meet with other key local officials and community members to raise awareness about and discuss the proposed cuts, which provide jobs and support key programs, officials said.

Warren will speak about the national effort by mayors to oppose cuts to the Community Development Block Grant program, the release said. He is Chair of the United States Conference of Mayor's Community Development and Housing Committee,

Six community members representing homeless services, community development organizations, small businesses, youth and homeowners are also expected at the 10:30 a.m. roundtable at the Ecumenical Social Action Committee's headquarters in Egleston Square, officials said.

A current proposal could cause Boston's social service providers and other recipients to lose more than $3 million in funding, according to the Menino's office.
