A male in his late teens was shot multiple times behind a residential building along South Street in Jamaica Plain this afternoon and sent to Brigham and Women's Hospital with non-life threatening injuries, police said.

The victim, whose name and exact age were not immediately released by authorities, was shot behind a building at 219 South St. and taken to the hospital, according to Boston Police spokesman Officer Eddy Chrispin. At about 2:30 p.m., officers responded to the address, which is a three-family, brick residence, according to the city's website.

No arrests had been made as of 8 p.m., according to police.

The area was temporarily closed off so police could investigate. Bullet holes were found in two vehicles, but “it is unclear what, if any, role the vehicles played in the incident,” Crispin said.

No further information was immediately available, the police spokesman said.

Ex-student sues over roommate's sex life

A former student at a Roman Catholic college has filed a lawsuit against the school, contending that administrators did not do enough to help her when she complained that her roommate was having too much sex in their dorm room. Lindsay Blankmeyer said in a federal lawsuit that she suffered from depression and attention deficit disorder before she enrolled at Stonehill College, but was driven into a suicidal depression after school officials would not give her reasonable housing alternatives to get her away from her roommate at the school in Easton. Blankmeyer said her roommate had sex with her boyfriend while she was trying to sleep just feet away and also participated in "sexually inappropriate video chatting" while Blankmeyer was in the dorm room. After trying unsuccessfully to persuade school officials to force her roommate to move out or to give her an acceptable private room, Blankmeyer ended up living at a hotel, according to the lawsuit filed this week. The lawsuit, filed in US District Court in Boston, seeks unspecified damages. (AP)
