An 18-year-old Lowell man died Sunday after he was shot in the head hours earlier in Lawrence, authorities said. Police found Richard Bonilla outside in the area of 400 Broadway in Lawrence at about 1 a.m., city police Chief John Romero said. Bonilla was transported to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center in Boston, where he died at about 4:30 p.m. Investigators believe Bonilla was shot by an unknown male who pulled out a gun after a verbal altercation escalated outside a party, Romero said. The dispute was allegedly supposedly over one group of people not being allowed into the party. It was the second homicide in Lawrence this year, Romero said. No arrests have been made.

Cardinal discussed archdiocese reorganization in first-ever live

webchat

Cardinal Sean P. O'Malley, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, on Friday called his new plan to reorganize the archdiocese a strategy for rebuilding rather than downsizing, and said he hoped it would rejuvenate the priesthood. "If we are going to evangelize well, parishes need to be grouped in a way that resources can be deployed toward outreach, welcoming, and the growth of the church in our archdiocese," O'Malley told readers in his first-ever live webchat on Boston.com.

Beverly woman finds, returns lost bag with $11,000 in cash

Cheryl Gavazzi went into a Swampscott department store Tuesday after work on a mission to get a birthday present for her daughter-in-law. Instead, she ended up hightailing it out of the store with a bag full of cash, frantically looking out for gun-toting drug dealers. In the bag was $11,000 in cash belonging to a Lynn couple who told police it was money they had raised to build a church in Guatemala.

Turkeys wear out their welcome in Newton

Frieda Dweck has taken her ongoing battle with the wild turkeys of Newton to a new level. Night after night, she arms herself with a tennis racket and balls before heading outside to shoo the big birds out of the trees surrounding her home. For Dweck and many of her neighbors, the novelty of seeing wildlife thriving in suburbia has worn off. At a recent forum on coyotes and turkeys, residents grouched about messy and aggressive turkeys and cat-killing coyotes.

From bad to worse for a bitter Mitt Romney

Mitt Romney has found the secret to winning a presidential campaign: giveaways. Specifically, giveaways to the people of color and immigrants — groups that supported Barack Obama in droves. It's a strikingly bitter response from a man who isn't used to losing and doesn't seem to take it well. But shedding the goal of being a standard-bearer for an increasingly intolerant Republican Party doesn't have to be all bad for someone who struggled to adapt himself to its positions.

Federal prosecutors say Whitey Bulger's claim of immunity is 'frivolous and absurd'

Prosecutors have asked a federal judge to determine before trial whether James "Whitey" Bulger has any standing to raise an immunity claim, arguing that the "frivolous" claim should not be brought before a jury in the high-profile case. "Otherwise, the trial of this matter will become unduly elongated and unmanageable," prosecutors said late Friday in court filings. Prosecutors said the notorious gangster's "pure fantasy" that he was granted immunity for his crimes should not continue to slow down the case.

Mass. state troopers help out in storm-wracked New Jersey

One house, swept by the sea, sits in the middle of an intersection a half-mile from its foundation; another is a pile of rubble mangled by Hurricane Sandy's powerful winds and waves. Those are some of the images seared into the memory of the leader of a group of Massachusetts state troopers sent to New Jersey to help with storm relief. "You cannot comprehend the amount of devastation that this storm caused. It's overwhelming," said Captain John Byrne.
