A man who was shot Saturday night on Blue Hill Avenue in Boston has died, according to a Boston police statement. Officers in Roxbury responded to a radio call after reports of a person shot at 9:43 p.m. and found the man suffering from a gunshot wound at 504 Blue Hill Ave. He was taken to Boston Medical Center, where he was later pronounced dead. Police released no other details Sunday. Detectives entered and exited at least one apartment building near the shooting scene Sunday night. Residents said people who knew the victim had gathered there earlier to mourn. Neighbors said they heard gunshots Saturday night but knew little else. Homicide detectives asked anyone with information to call at 617-343-4470.

Officials warn residents about displaced bears

The Vermont Fish and Wildlife Department is warning residents about displaced, agitated bears due to the fickle winter. A lack of snow exposes dens and winter rain can make bears uncomfortable and restless, both factors that can cause them to awaken and abandon their dens, said Bear Project Leader Forrest Hammond. The department said it has received reports of bears at bird feeders, in residential areas and in the back country. A bear is reported to have killed a hunter's beagle in Elmore. Disrupted bears sometimes produce nests of spruce boughs in dense evergreen thickets so hare and rabbit hunters should be extra wary of these areas, the department said.

Exotic monkey seized from home

Connecticut officials have seized a small, exotic monkey from a home in Waterbury and charged a woman living there after the animal scratched her 10-year-old daughter. Television station WFSB reported Saturday that Mariantonia Morales was charged with risk of injury to a minor and owning an exotic pet. Morales' daughter was with a friend when the child opened the cage containing the palm-sized marmoset monkey. Morales tells WFSB-TV that the monkey scratched her daughter and she applied an antibiotic to the wound. Investigators say Morales did not take her daughter to hospital and authorities only learned of the incident after a teacher questioned the girl on what caused her injury.
