An 80-year-old man suffered serious head injuries after he was struck by a car in Falmouth Sunday morning, according to police.

A 2004 gray Toyota Avalon driven by an 89-year-old woman pulled out of the St. Patrick's Church parking lot, heading east on Main Street, and struck the man, who was walking in a crosswalk in front of the church at about 7:50 a.m., Falmouth police Sergeant Brian Kinsella said.

Witnesses told police the car was traveling fairly slowly when it hit the man, Kinsella said.

The man was taken by helicopter to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston to be treated for head trauma, Kinsella said.

Police cited the driver for failing to yield to a pedestrian in a crosswalk.

Officials warn residents about displaced bears

The Vermont Fish and Wildlife Department is warning residents about displaced, agitated bears due to the fickle winter. A lack of snow exposes dens and winter rain can make bears uncomfortable and restless, both factors that can cause them to awaken and abandon their dens, said Bear Project Leader Forrest Hammond. The department said it has received reports of bears at bird feeders, in residential areas and in the back country. A bear is reported to have killed a hunter's beagle in Elmore. Disrupted bears sometimes produce nests of spruce boughs in dense evergreen thickets so hare and rabbit hunters should be extra wary of these areas, the department said.

Exotic monkey seized from home

Connecticut officials have seized a small, exotic monkey from a home in Waterbury and charged a woman living there after the animal scratched her 10-year-old daughter. Television station WFSB reported Saturday that Mariantonia Morales was charged with risk of injury to a minor and owning an exotic pet. Morales' daughter was with a friend when the child opened the cage containing the palm-sized marmoset monkey. Morales tells WFSB-TV that the monkey scratched her daughter and she applied an antibiotic to the wound. Investigators say Morales did not take her daughter to hospital and authorities only learned of the incident after a teacher questioned the girl on what caused her injury.
