The 26-year-old Boston man who allegedly was naked when he fell through the ceiling of a Logan Airport women's bathroom and then bit and choked an elderly man on Saturday afternoon is a student at the Harvard University Extension School, officials said.

Cameron Shenk is pursuing a bachelor of liberal arts in extension studies, university spokeswoman Anna Cowenhoven said Monday.

The Extension School, which is independent of Harvard College, offers continuing education through open-enrollment courses, as well as professional certificates and liberal arts-based undergraduate and graduate degree programs aimed at nontraditional students.

At around noon Saturday, a woman using a restroom in Terminal C reported that a naked man, later identified as Shenk, fell into the stall area before running out where he encountered an 84-year-old man, according to State Police.

Shenk allegedly bit the man's ear and began choking him with his own cane, authorities said. The elderly man was taken to a hospital for treatment and a trooper also suffered minor injuries.

Naked man falls through ceiling at Logan

A 26-year-old naked man fell through the ceiling into a ladies' bathroom before running out and biting an elderly man, police said.

Authorities said they believe Shenk sneaked into the women's room, took off his clothes, and climbed into a crawl space above the restroom.

Shenk faces charges of attempted murder, assault and battery on a police officer, assault and battery on a person over 60, and a lewd and lascivious act.
