Food safety grades for every restaurant in Boston

The following table shows how Boston restaurants performed in recent food safety inspections.

Chart: Food safety grades for every restaurant in Boston - The Boston Globe

Use the search bar in the top right to look up your favorite restaurants, or to search by neighborhood or address.

The table includes the date of each inspection and the numerical score each establishment would have earned at that visit, based on the formula the city plans to use for its forthcoming restaurant grading system.

The city's grading system will start every restaurant off with 100 points. Points will be deducted for each violation.

Ten points will be deducted for the most serious violations; seven for intermediate violations; and two for the least serious.

A score of 94 or higher translates to an A letter grade, according to the city's new rating system. A score of 81 to 93 would be a B. A score of 80 or lower would be a C.

When a restaurant falls short, even slightly, on an initial inspection, city officials usually require it be re-inspected over the course of days or a few weeks until past problems have been fixed.

The city says restaurants that get a B or C on initial inspection will be allowed one reinspection to boost their mark before it is posted publicly. The city also says it has no plans for numerical scores to be posted publicly.

The data covers the period from the start of 2015 to Aug. 8, 2016.
