The 39 people considered for Hillary Clinton's VP

The list comes from an e-mail that Clinton campaign chairman John Podesta sent to Clinton last March. The message was among hacked emails disclosed Tuesday by WikiLeaks. The list was organized by Podesta into "rough food groups," including Hispanics, women, blacks, and former military leaders. Another group appeared to represent "outside-the-box" options, including American business leaders and philanthropists. The list below is in the same order and divided into the same groups as it was in Podesta's email. Clinton's campaign has declined to confirm the authenticity of alleged Podesta e-mails and has suggested some may have been altered, according to wire reports.
